

The Covey Stool

The Covey Stool represents a dynamic relationship between form, comfort, and functionality. Drawing upon Buckminster Fuller's theory of tensegrity, the stool strikes an elegant balance between structural integrity and formal minimalism. Featured in the permanent collection of the San Francisco Museum of Modern art (SFMOMA) the stool has been called an American classic.

Specifications

The Covey Stool is hand-assembled and individually numbered in the United States by Genesis Seating, a company committed to crafting classic, modern design. It is the same company that produces Herman Miller's line of Eames furniture as well as the Knoll Classics.

The stool has a subtly contoured seat for comfort and formed steel legs with nylon feet to help protect floors. An acme thread with a Delrin® sleeve allows smooth and easy height adjustment.
